Three Day Leadership Course - Accra, Ghana

Strategic Human Resources Management; Transforming Human Resources from a cost to a benefit

Course director

Human Resources Management and Organisational Development consultant Niall Crotty has over 40 years experience in both the private and public sectors; with Bank of Ireland - Ireland's premier Financial Institution - and as a management consultant working with leading international organisations such as the EU, World Bank and United Nations. As Head of Organisational Development at the Bank of Ireland, reporting to the Group CEO, he advised on re-structuring, conflict resolution, training needs analysis, process consultation and the design and implementation of salary and bonus systems.

Niall is a specialist in crafting Human Resources Management strategy in the context of developing and growing organisations. As a management consultant he has worked on many international projects, advising on human resources, organisational restructuring, change management and staff communications coaching. He has a Masters Degree in Organisational Behaviour from Trinity College in Dublin, is a member of Institute of Bankers and the Irish Management Institute and has lectured at Trinity College, the Irish Management Institute, the Irish Institute of Public Administration and the University of Ulster.

About the course

As markets become more competitive, the Human Resources professional faces new and demanding challenges. Privatisation, mergers & acquisitions and trade liberalisation add new complexities to the traditional role of HR; requiring the HR professional to become a strategic partner involved in the transformation of the enterprise and contributing to company wide issues - able to initiate policy, manage change and ultimately add value to the business.

This comprehensive three day course focuses on the key issues relating to the perception, image and actuality of HR in today's businesses. The course will enable participants to review the evolving role of HR and what this role now requires in terms of business and people competencies, focusing on how to build and negotiate new relationships with staff, line and top management and how to communicate the strategic vision of HR to internal and external stakeholders. Participants will be provided with an opportunity to review the key areas of HR activity, and learn to develop strategic approaches to make the HR function an essential partner for organisational success.

Who should attend?

This course is designed for executives responsible for their organisation's HR strategy:

- HR Directors
- HR Managers
- Training Managers
